A tsunami is coming made up of the millions of people who will be getting older and retiring in the next few years according to medical experts. Unfortunately, many of these people will be suffering from Alzheimer's. Alzheimer's, as yet, has no cure, nor even a way to slow it down. Facilities to take care of them will become extremely expensive. Therefore, their care will be up to members of the family or caring friends. This book is a personal account of one family caring for a loved one with Alzheimer's. Hopefully this account gives the reader not only practical "management" of information but also information on how to cope, understand and accept the behavior of a loved one suffering from Alzheimer's.
